ABOUT OUR PANELISTS

Anne Williams-Isom, the moderator, is the New York City deputy mayor for health and human services. In this role, she advances the city's efforts to coordinate system transformation across the city's public health care system, expand access to social services for all, and ensure that programs and policies that serve the city's most vulnerable populations, including children in foster care and families living in homeless shelters, are administered compassionately, equitably, and effectively. She also serves as the James R. Dumpson Chair in Child Welfare Studies at the Graduate School of Social Service at Fordham University. She previously was the chief operating officer and then chief executive officer of the Harlem Children's Zone, and prior to that, she served as a deputy commissioner at the New York City Administration for Children's Services. A native of Queens and an alumna of Fordham College at Lincoln Center, she earned a J.D. from Columbia Law School and a doctorate in ministry from the New York Theological Seminary.

Celia Fisher is the Marie Ward Doty University Chair in Ethics, professor of psychology, and founding director of the Fordham University Center for Ethics Education and the National Institutes of Health-funded HIV and Drug Abuse Prevention Research Ethics Training Institute. Through her teaching, federally supported research grants, and national leadership, she is devoted to promoting justice and reducing health disparities among socially and economically marginalized populations. She has published more than 300 articles, edited eight books, and is the author of Decoding the Ethics Code: A Practical Guide for Psychologists, now in its fifth edition. Her honors include a Lifetime Achievement Award for Excellence in Human Research Protections, an American Psychological Association Award for Outstanding Contributions to Ethics Education, and appointment as a fellow of the American Association for the Advancement of Science.

Iftekhar Hasan is a university professor and serves as the E. Gerald Corrigan Chair in International Business and Finance at the Gabelli School of Business at Fordham University.
